

NEW ABSTRACT

A backlight device for a liquid crystal display includes several lamps disposed within a housing. Each lamp has a part that can be cooled so as to obtain a good light output. The lamp parts extend through the housing wall into a channel through which air can flow. The lamps may be tubular lamps which extend into the channel with at least one end.